

Become an ACP provider through Plum

Plum helps MVNOs become a provider of the Affordable Connectivity Program. First, we grant access to preferred rates that enable our customers to offer prepaid wireless service plans to eligible consumers. Second, we connect MVNOs with trusted third-party vendors who help qualify subscriber households. Finally, we provide a dedicated support team of experts to ensure success.

How we support MVNOs

Expertise

Experience in planning, launching and supporting an ACP program

Established processes in place for the program with approved vendor partners

ACP Approved Plans

Talk, text and data plans tailored to ACP requirements

Programs for qualifying household types including residents of tribal lands

Subscriber Management Systems

Integration through one of Plum's reliable MVNE partners

ACP qualification program integrated into the back-end of the purchasing process

Account Support

Information tracking with reporting for usage and compliance

Transparency with subscriber data and life cycle

What is ACP?

The Affordable Connectivity Program is an FCC benefit program that helps ensure that households can afford the broadband they need for work, school, healthcare and more.

The benefit provides a discount of up to $30 per month toward internet service for eligible households and up to $75 per month for households on qualifying Tribal lands. Eligible households can also receive a one-time discount of up to $100 to purchase a laptop, desktop computer, or tablet from participating providers if they contribute more than $10 and less than $50 toward the purchase price.

The Affordable Connectivity Program is limited to one monthly service discount and one device discount per household.

Who is eligible for the Affordable Connectivity Program?

A household is eligible for the Affordable Connectivity Program if the household income is at or below 200% of the Federal Poverty Guidelines, or if a member of the household meets at least one of the criteria set forth.
